

Symptoms of Snoring

Snororing is a unilateral problem which affects people of all ages and affects those who have to share a bed with them much more. Cures for snoring range from the common to the bizarre, with a last resort being surgery on the tissues of the septum or even the throat. You are likely to look like chipmunk with black eyes for months after the operation, and this is considerable, but if it works it is worth it, otherwise your eyes may well be blacked simply by your lover who has been powered to the edge of madness by the sounds of the snoring.

So what can be done about the snoring problem? Well, before you trawl the net searching for cures “ Men snore a lot more than women, and snorers themselves suffer even though they can not hear the appalling sound they decide to make simply because, without realizing this, they are getting up many times a evening, which means the quality of their particular slumber is poor and they wake up following morning because tired as when they haven't slept whatsoever. A exhausted husband along with a sleepless wife do not make for a harmonious partnership!

for snoring, it really is worth doing a little detective work in an attempt to establish whether the culprit is a nasal or even mouth snorer. The only way you will find this out is to hear him; so avoid the need to smother him with his favorite Winnie-the-Pooh pillow and watch your pet instead. If he or she falls asleep together with his mouth closed and snores through his / her nasal area, then his nasal passages are usually constricted; maybe he has small nostrils or a partial congestion from a deformed septum, or has damaged his nose at some stage in his life. Problems such as sinusitis, asthma and rhinitis can also trigger nose snoring, as can having a cold.
